PRESIDENT ARTHUR.

[From the Providence Journal.]

President Arthur taking the oath of office at two o'clock in the morning in his rooms in the city of New York, performed a constitutional duty under circumstances painful as they were imperative. He has been called providentially, and under the requirements of the supreme law, to a position which, as he did not when he was elected Vice President expect to occupy, so he cannot either legally or properly reject. He is President of the United States, both by the law of the land. As such entitled to that consideration which belongs to the office, and to that candid, calm and intelligent judgment which American citizens owe it quite as much to themselves to bestow, as it is the right of an official, to claim. As a matter of pure law and abstract equity, President Arthur is to be tried by that which he shall do or omit to do in his high office.

But there is another law. It is impossible, if it were desirable, which we by no means say, either for Mr. Arthur or the public to put aside the antecedents, the legislation, the fears and the injustices which have been and are related to his present situation. We may surmise, but cannot realize, that which he has had to endure since the fatal bullet struck the wounded Garfield. What, and all, we know is, that during the painful suspense of the past weeks, he has held himself as could best become a man. He has exhibited a sincere and proper sympathy; has maintained a wise reserve and dignified behavior; he has to the very verge of unlawful inaction declined to say or do anything which appeared likely to annoy the dying Garfield, or to indicate a desire to accept, much less to assume, authority. Suspicion cannot point to an indiscreet act, nor slander impute a wrongful nor an immanly motive. On the other hand, both among those who know him best, and with the unknowing but watchful public, he has placed much within the last twelve weeks here is not only a suspension of judgment, there is a decided feeling that he has traced qualities of a sweet and noble character. Where there was prejudice against him, there is now confidence in him.

This change of feeling on the part of those who had distrusted Mr. Arthur is due to his conduct. It has been compelled by a closer and ampler knowledge of the man. It is not a spasm of popular enthusiasm; it is the cool, deliberate conclusion of thinking and interested persons. It is not the perfunctory result of party discipline; it is the conviction of those whose high and care are for the public welfare.

Let us ascend a little. If what we have said is justified by the facts, and everything we see and hear testifies that it is, then in such case we have an encouraging view of the sense and honor of the people. Our institutions will remain safe so long as the citizens subordinate passion and prejudice to truth and the law. So long as their esteem and duty follow the office and not the man. Not that the individual and the position should be separated in thought and regard, but that the first, the imperative relation, should be to the office, which is the right and privilege of the people. The President then is not only the servant of the people, but he is entitled to their support in and by virtue of his office, in so far as their voice or acts are essential to the highest and best performance of his duties. The American people love fairplay; they are honest and they are sensible; herein is the guarantee, not simply that they will deal with President Arthur as he deserves to be dealt with, but that they will uphold the Constitution and the laws, liberty and good government.

MR. REED'S SPEECH.

The Boston Herald's attempt to forestall and discredit in advance the able speech delivered Wednesday by Hon. Thomas B. Reed, before the Massachusetts Republican State Convention at Worcester, proved gratifying failure, as the speaker and his decisive remarks were received with so great favor, that even the Herald's subsequent special was constrained to state that Mr. Reed's speech took with the delegates, and elicited both laughter and applause. The Maine Congressman who is casting an eye toward the Speakership of the National House, secured his opportunity to make the acquaintance of our Republicans, and really made a good impression. He was attentively listened to, and his eloquent allusions to the dead President were commended on all hands."

The eloquent peroration, which did not reach us by telegraph, was as follows:

There is one more word to say. Whether it be at politics or business or prayers our hearts are always turning to the brave soldier, the accomplished statesman, who is at last in peace, after so much suffering, within the gates of death. Beside that worn and wasted frame, with all their wealth, with all their knowledge, with all their treasure of love, fifty millions of people stood powerless. Wealth could do nothing. Science could do nothing, and to no more. There could be only patient waiting and then the folded hands. And he come back to strength and vigor the love of a whole people would have made him more than conqueror in all the fields of honorable duty. Even now his life, though cut off in its golden prime, cannot be wasted. There are no failures

"In the sight
Of One All Perfect who, whether man falls in his work or succeeds,
Holds sure-ly, solemnly up from our broken days and deeds
The infinite purpose of Love."

"THY WILL BE DONE."

An eloquent editorial in the Maine Farmer, by Howard Owen, Esq., closes with these words:

To the patient sufferer himself all is well, resting upon the solid rock of Christian faith and hope, knowing in whom he trusts, the clear eye of his spiritual vision could look over the sea of eternity without fear or trembling, even as his mortal eyes rested upon the deep blue of the ocean to the borders of which he was brought by loving hands for the life-giving breezes that never came. There are no surprises or disappointments to him there, where with Washington and Lincoln, and the great and good of all ages, he has joined the immortal throng that no man can number. In the mysterious workings of that Providence whose throne is so often enveloped in clouds and thick darkness, whose works are so often mysterious, the prayers of the people for the restoration of their President were not granted. But "His ways are not our ways," and the prayers of the loyal subject of the unseen but real kingdom must ever begin and end, "Thy will be done."

The workman dies, but the work goes on. The President is dead, but the Republic lives; the wheels of government will move on, though guided by other hands; the clouds of sorrow will flee away, and the government will feel the impulse of a new and chastened power because of the life and death of James A. Garfield."

JAMES A. GARFIELD.

The Record of a Noble Life.

Garfield was a representative American, a descendant of some of the first settlers in the country, and acquainted with the trials and difficulties that beset the pioneer. On the paternal side his ancestry runs back to Edward Garfield, who, in 1635, was recorded as one of the proprietors of what is now the town of Watertown, Mass. His mother was a descendant of one of those Huguenots whom the famous "Edict of Nantes" drove from their beloved France to seek religious freedom in the New World. From the Garfields he inherited physical and moral strength, while from his mother he received that intellectual vigor and those mental qualities which have marked in many generations the descendants of Maturin Ballou. President Garfield's birthplace was a log cabin in a wilderness some fifteen miles from that modest home which he left in order to take up his residence in the White House. He was born November 19, 1831, the youngest of four children who were left fatherless eighteen months later. The widowed mother held her home, and farm, and held her children together upon it. Thomas, the oldest and the only other boy, was already a little fellow, and did what he could to help, while the sisters also made themselves useful in the household. At the early age of three years James began to attend school. In a little log school house, the site for which had been given by Mrs. Garfield. He was an apt scholar and at the age of eight years was a good reader, speller and writer. Books were his delight, and among the works with which he became thoroughly acquainted during his boyhood were "Josephus" and Goodrich's "History of the United States." With the Bible he was familiar from the first, for Mrs. Garfield, a devoted adherent of the "Campbellite" faith, was fully mindful of her children's spiritual interests and carefully implanted in their minds the truths of the Christian religion. Among the books that fell in the boy's way, however, were some that were not so instructive as those already mentioned, for boy-like, he loved stories, and one of those which he read made him long for a life upon the sea. Still he remained at home until he was sixteen years old, pursued his studies with as much vigor as ever, did chores about his mother's place, worked for other people as he had opportunity, and proving himself a capable and industrious lad. He had learned something of the carpenter's trade, and had replaced the log house in which he was born by a neater appearing and more convenient edifice. He was about seventeen years old when he finally started to enter upon the seafaring life which he had long dreamed of. Arriving at Cleveland to ship before the mast upon some of the lake craft, circumstances compelled him to abandon the plan, and he was led to become a driver on a canal towpath. As driver, and then as bostman, he worked on the Ohio Canal several months.

OBTAINING AN EDUCATION.

In March, 1849, young Garfield became a student in the Geauga Seminary, a Free-will Baptist institution at Chester. At the end of the term he worked at haying and carpentering. During his first year he paid all his expenses and had a few dollars left. Teaching was his occupation during the interval between his first and second year at Chester, and as a teacher he proved himself a master in his school. It was one of those "district" schools, not yet things of the past, even in New England, the male pupils in which regard the teacher as a natural enemy. Garfield proved himself the physical as well as the intellectual superior of the lads committed to his charge, and ruled them as well as taught them.

After his course at Chester, young Garfield in the fall of 1851 entered the Hiram Institute, where the course of instruction was considerably more advanced than any which he had yet taken. Devoting himself to his studies with the vigor which had marked his efforts thus far, teaching in the winters and keeping up his own work steadily, he found himself in June, 1854, not only ready to enter college, but to enter the Junior class. He had paid his way and had saved about $200 toward defraying his expenses at college. Not only as a student but as a member of society he had earned a high standing, his life being marked by the exercise of those lofty principles which his good mother had been earnest always to teach her children. It was a simple incident that led him to select Williams College as the institution in which to complete his education. A few kind words, added by President Hopkins to the brief business note in which he conveyed some information to the young student in regard to the college course, seemed like a friendly grasp of the hand, and so he went to Williamstown. From letters written lately by prominent men who were fellow students with him there a very interesting portrait of him may be drawn. He had a robust physique and an open countenance. There was no stint in his make-up and no assumed gentility. He was broad both in scholarship and in sympathies. Not given to athletic sports, he was fond of them. Social, quick to perceive and ready to enjoy the humorous, self-possessed, hearty and cheery as a friend, studious and yet not a bookish recluse, he was liked and admired by his associates, while President Hopkins looked upon him as a man having a purpose.

GARFIELD AS A TEACHER.

Graduating with high honors in 1856, Mr. Garfield returned to the Hiram Institute as Professor of Latin and Greek, and as a teacher, he infused new life and spirit into the institution. He taught earnestly, and added to his labors as teacher those of preparing and delivering scientific lectures. He soon rose to be President of the institution, and he filled the office in a very practical manner. He placed himself on familiar terms with his pupils, laughed, joked and played with them, and had a winning way of conversing with those whom he found it advisable to commend or reprove. He endeavored to get the pupils to remember details. In the algebra or the Latin class he would suddenly break out with "Andrew, how many poles are there under the building down stairs?" The question would be sent all round the class, and so with others. He was a very accurate observer and never passed by anything without understanding it. Then, while social and familiar, as already stated, he was a precise enforcer of rules, and once expelled a son of Jerry Black for turbulence and a breach of the regulations. The boy's father liked him the better for his impartiality. Rev. J. L. Dorsey, of Danbury, Conn., who makes these statements concerning Garfield at Hiram, says: "When he was Principal I remember he caught two great strapping fellows fighting under the windows. He seized first one and then the other by the collar and flung them over the fence, telling them to fight in the street if they must fight at all, and then to report to him."

POLITICS AND POLITICAL LIFE.

Mr. Garfield's interest in politics began while he was at Williams College. Mr. Lavalette Wilson, of Haverstraw, N. Y., says that when Garfield was uncommitted in national politics. In the fall of 1853, Hon. John Z. Goodrich, who was at that time one of the Massachusetts Representatives in Congress, delivered in Williamstown an address on the Kansas-Nebraska struggle, and the efforts of the handful of Republicans then in Congress to defeat the repeal of the Missouri Compromise. Mr. Garfield drank in every word, and said to Mr. Wilson as they passed out: "This subject is entirely new to me. I am going to know all about it." He sent for documents, studied them until he became perfectly familiar with the anti-slavery struggle, and from that hour he has been a thorough Republican and the champion of right against wrong, justice. On his return to Ohio he did not keep his political opinions to himself, but uttered them as occasion required, and found a ready response in many minds. In 1856 the people of Summit and Portage counties, regarding him as a man capable to care for public interests, elected him to the State Senate by a majority which showed him to have attained great popularity. In that body he displayed great ability as a debater and as a worker. With Hon. Jacob D. Cox and Senator Monroe, he took a firm stand in the conflict which was then breaking up parties, and the three were known as the "radical Senators." His work in connection with such matters as the geological survey of the State, the educational question, weights and measures, and other important measures, was earnest and useful. It was during the last part of his services in the Senate that the imminence of the civil war began to be manifest, and he was one of those who, foreseeing what might come, advocated preparing for it. In a speech on January 21, 1861, in behalf of a bill for raising and equipping 5000 militia, there spoke the spirit of a man who was ready to do his part in the preservation of the endangered Union. He took the lead in revising the old statutes against treason, with the view of adapting it to the emergency, and was one of the most conspicuous defenders of the bill appropriating one million dollars for the purpose of placing the State of Ohio upon a war footing.

ADMITTED TO THE BAR.

President Hopkins regarded Mr. Garfield as a man with a purpose, and he was a man who kept his purpose in view. The profession he had chosen for himself was that of the law, and amid the various duties which he took upon himself from the time when he graduated at Williams College he found opportunity for that study which would qualify him for the calling he had chosen. His legislative career afforded him opportunity for finishing his legal education, and in 1860 he was admitted to the Bar.

GARFIELD AS A SOLDIER.

When the call to arms for the Union cause was made, Mr. Garfield was tendered a commission by Governor Dennison, and accepting it he gave himself with his usual whole-heartedness to the work before him. Commissioned as Lieutenant Colonel in August, 1861, he was soon promoted to be Colonel, and in the following December he went to the front with a well-drilled regiment. Reporting to Gen. Buell at Louisville, that officer saw in the young Colonel the promise of bravery and efficiency, and in his regiment something much better than a band of raw recruits. Colonel Garfield's first service in the war was to quell Humphrey Marshall, who was dashing on through Eastern Kentucky, bound to force the State into the Confederacy. Garfield's campaign was swift and vigorous, and counts among the brilliant achievements of the war. It was only a fortnight long, but it saved Kentucky to the Union, then, and there never was a time afterward when the work could be undone. Said President Lincoln afterward: "Why was it that Garfield did in two weeks what it would have taken you Regular folks two months to accomplish?" "Because he wasn't educated at West Point," jocularly answered the West Pointer. "No," said Mr. Lincoln, "that was not the reason. It was because when Garfield was a boy he had to work for his living." This is the lesson of Garfield's whole life. He worked for what he got. In the hard-fought battle of Chickamauga, he was chief of staff to Gen. Rosecrans, and did most venturous and dangerous service, carrying to Gen. Thomas that message that saved the day, so that the despatch of Rosecrans giving up the day, and his next one, conveying Garfield's report that the ground was held, reached Washington together; Rosecrans lost his command by this, and Garfield was made a Major General. The records of the war show his ability and his faithfulness as a soldier. Two or three anecdotes will serve here the purpose of showing some of his characteristics as a soldier. It is said that Mrs. Garfield could never understand why Providence had put her husband through his canal experience until after his expedition in Eastern Kentucky. His command had run short of provisions and a boat had been sent for supplies, but the river by which the men were encamped had risen so high that the boat dared not attempt to go up the river. Garfield, however, took command of the craft, stood at the wheel forty-four hours out of the forty-eight, and brought the supplies to his men at a time when they were eating their last crackers! He was not afraid to do anything a soldier was required to do. At Pittsburg Landing on night in 1862 there was a rush for rations by some newly-arrived troops. One strong, fine-looking soldier presented a requisition for a barrel of flour, and shouldering it walked off with ease. When the wagon was loaded this same man stepped up to Col. Morton, commanding the commissary steamers there, and remarked: "I suppose you require a receipt for these supplies?" "Yes," said the Colonel, as he handed over the usual blank; "just take this provision return and have it signed by your commanding officer." "Can't I sign it?" was the reply. "Oh, no!" said the affable Col. Morton, "it requires the signature of a commissioned officer." Then came the remark that still remains fresh in the Colonel's memory: "I am a commissioned officer—I'm a Brigadier General, and my name is Garfield of Ohio."

GEN. GARFIELD IN CONGRESS.

At the end of two years General Garfield had risen by the force of character and faithful performance of duty to the highest rank attained by volunteers—that of Major General. At that time, that portion of the Western Reserve, which had been represented by such champions of freedom as Elisha Whittlesey and Joshua R. Giddings, fixed upon General Garfield as the man best qualified to represent it in Congress. He had never thought of a nomination or an election. It was a spontaneous demand. By the advice of President Lincoln he accepted the honor. He entered the House in December, 1863, and served continuously until the date of his resignation when he had been nominated for President. In January, 1880, he was elected United States Senator in obedience to the general demand of the Republicans of Ohio, but, being elected President, he declined the honor. Thus within a year he was Representative and Senator and President-elect. In Congress Gen. Garfield early made his mark, and took a prominent part in discussions of the hour. He served on many important committees, including the Military during the war, Appropriations and Ways and Means. He was a model debtor. He discussed measures, not men, and no man during the later years of his service was his equal.

HIS ELECTION TO THE PRESIDENCY.

General Garfield was not a candidate for the Presidency. If it was ever his ambition to be President, it was not until after he had served in the Senate. His nomination came to him unsought and unwished. He was at Chicago to promote the nomination of Mr. Sherman. In that convention he was a conspicuous character. His speech presenting the name of Secretary Sherman was one of his ablest efforts. When it appeared impossible to nominate either of the prominent candidates, the delegates hostile to the third term made a break for General Garfield. The break began on the 34th ballot when he received 17 votes. The next ballot he received 50, and on the 36th ballot he received 399 and his nomination was made unanimous. The nomination was received with joyful acclaim by the Republican party. He was elected in November, receiving the Electoral vote of every Northern State except New Jersey, Nevada and California, receiving one vote in the latter State. The features and incidents of his Administration are so fresh in the minds of the public that it is unnecessary to refer to them.

THE SECOND DISTRICT VICTORY.

The official returns of the vote for Congressman in the Second District were canvassed on Tuesday by the Governor and Council, and Hon. Nelson Dingley, Jr., was declared duly elected, as follows:

Whole number of votes,	16,771
Nelson Dingley, Jr., had	10,961
Washington Gilbert,	5,610
William T. Eustis,	66
Franklin Reed,	132
Scattering,	47
Dingley's plurality,	5,412
" majority,	5,118.

AN OPEN LETTER

—FROM—

W. F. SHAW,

—TO—

HIS PATRONS AND THE PUBLIC.

The undersigned, dealer in Boots and Shoes, Hats and Caps, Gloves, Umbrellas, etc., etc., at NO. 20 MAIN STREET, would most respectfully announce to his patrons and the public generally, that on and after the 1st of July last, the credit system at his establishment will be abolished and no sales will be made except strictly for cash.

This new departure is not made without having been carefully considered. The undersigned is aware that several of his best customers who are persons of means and whose word is as good as the gold, may possibly feel offended, yet a little reflection will convince them that they will be benefited by the change. It is the earnest desire and honest determination of the undersigned to give to his customers the best goods at the lowest possible prices. This can only be accomplished by the adoption of a cash system. By this means the salaries of book-keepers and persons to make collections are saved, and the undersigned, with the cash in hand, will be enabled to take advantage of the market and thus secure bargains which will benefit his patrons. His expenses will be greatly reduced, no bad bills will be incurred, he will not then as now be obliged to carry on his books a large amount of indebtedness to the concern, on which, of course, there is no interest, and some of which cannot be collected. It will cost the undersigned a painful effort to refuse credit to his friends, but his friends, if they once adopted, must be rightly entered. He sincerely believes that every reflecting person will approve of his course, and he earnestly hopes that his patrons may see that the adoption of a cash system must be mutually beneficial. He also desires to assure his customers, one and all, that they will ever receive the most courteous treatment, and pledges them that they shall receive the full benefit arising from the change, guaranteeing to them better bargains than would be possible to obtain under any other system of conducting business.

Goods may be returned if not satisfactory, and the money will be cheerfully refunded.

Thanking his patrons for past favors and solicits a continuance of the same, the undersigned is very respectfully, the public's obedient servant,

W. F. SHAW.

I learn that the President of the United States just died notwithstanding the excellent and intelligent cares which he has received during the long period of his suffering Be pleased to convey the expression of my sympathy to Mrs. Garfield his family whose carriage during the painful ordeal to which she has been subjected called forth my sincere admiration I accept also in my name and in that of the French Republic the expression of the upright of which we feel in consequence of the final result of the odious crime to which Mr Garfield has been a victim

The Oath of Office

WASHINGTON, Sept 22 President Arthur has just taken the oath of office in the marble room at the Capitol, in the presence of the Cabinet, Justices of the Supreme Court, a few Senators and members of the House of Representatives—all who could be notified this morning in time to be present, also Gen. Sherman, Grant, Rear Admiral Nichols, Hon. Hannibal Hamlin Gen Beale and a few others Forty people in all were present at the time the oath was taken. This step was taken after a conference held about an hour since between the President, Secretary Blaine and the Attorney General Very few persons know that the oath was to be administered until the ceremony was over The President and members of the Cabinet had assembled in the marble room shortly before 12 o clock. A few minutes before 12 Chief Justice Waite in his full robes of office, accompanied by the Associate Justices, proceeded from the Supreme Court room to the marble room, the doors were immediately closed and without any formality President Arthur arose and standing upon one side of the centre table Chief Justice Waite on the other, took the oath of office The President's manner was calm and composed. His response "so help me God" was in firm tones and without a tremor The President then read from manuscript notes the following address

President Arthur's Address

The following is President Arthur's address

For the fourth time in the history of the Republic its Chief Magistrate has been removed by death. All hearts are filled with grief and horror at the hideous crime which has darkened our land, and the memory of the murdered President, his protracted sufferings, his unyielding fortitude, the exemplary and heroic elements of his life and the pathos of his death will forever illumine the pages of our history.

For the fourth time the office elected by the people and ordained by the Constitution to fill a vacancy so created, is called to assume the executive chair. The wisdom of our fathers, foreseeing even the most dire possibilities, made sure that the government should never be imperilled because of the uncertainty of human life Men may die, but the fabric of our free institutions remains unshaken No higher or more assuring proof could exist of the strength and permanence of the popular government than the fact that though the choice of the people has struck down the constitutional successor is peacefully installed, without shock or strain except the sorrow which mourns the bereavement All the noble aspirations of my lamented predecessor, which found expression in his life the measures devised and suggested during his brief administration to correct abuses and enforce economy, to advance prosperity and promote the general welfare, to ensure domestic security and maintain friendly and honorable relations with all the nations of the earth will be garnered in the hearts of the people, and it will be my earnest endeavor to profit and to see that the nation shall profit by his example and experience

Prosperity blesses our country Our fiscal policy fixed by law is well grounded and generally approved No threatening issues mar our foreign intercourse and the wisdom, integrity and thrift of our people may be trusted to continue undisturbed the present measure of peace, tranquility and welfare The gloom and anxiety which have overshrouded the country must make repose especially welcome now No demand for speedy legislation has been heard, no exigency occasion is apparent for an unusual session of Congress The Constitution defines the functions and powers of the Executive as clearly as those of either of the other two departments of the government, and he must answer for the just exercise of the discretion it permits and the performance of the duties it imposes Summoned to assume these high duties and responsibilities and profoundly conscious of their magnitude and gravity, I ass me the trust imposed by the Constitution, relying for aid on Divine guidance and the virtue patriotism and intelligence of the American people

After the reading of the address by the President, Secretary Blaine stepped forward and grasped the President's hand and after him other members of the Cabinet Justices of the Supreme Court, a few Senators and members of the House of Representatives present

Beautiful Floral Offerings

A short time since four very elaborate and exquisitely beautiful flower pieces were received from the White House and have been placed at the head of the Library were arranged by Henry Pittur, Superintendent of the White House conservatory The first is a circular pillar of white roses representing a broken shaft resting upon a pedestal of white roses Muréchal Neil and tube roses relieved with maiden hair ferns The broken top being of purple immortelles and surrounded by a white dove with head bent downward toward the broken shaft Next to this a very wheel-to pillar representing the heavenly gates ajar The gate posts are about four feet high surrounded by circles of lilies of purple immortelles and tube roses The crown is composed mainly of white roses relieved with others of a pale yellow tint and with ferns between the posts are half opened fans of Muréchal Neil roses and ferns The third piece represents a crown of glory and is also of white roses and ferns and is surmounted by a cross of immortelles

Funeral Services Friday

The body will lie in state until Friday noon when seats will be placed in the rotunda for those who will be admitted to attend the funeral services, which will take place at three that afternoon Rev. Fredrick Power pastor of the deceased President, will officiate The space will accommodate about 1,500 people and only that number of tickets will be issued

A Proclamation

The following proclamation has just been issued by President Arthur—By the President of the United States of America—a proclamation Whereas In His Infinite wisdom it has pleased God to remove from us the illustrious head of the Nation James A Garfield, the late President of the United States, and whereas it is fitting that the deep grief which fills all hearts should manifest itself with one accord toward the throne of Infinite grace, and that we all only bow before the Almighty and seek from him that consolation in our affliction and that sanctification of our loss which He is able and willing to vouchsafe Now therefore I in obedience to a sacred duty and in accordance with the wishes of the people, I, Chester A Arthur President of the United States of America do hereby appoint Monday next, the fifteenth day of September on which day the remains of our honored and beloved dead will be consigned to their last resting place on earth, to be observed throughout the United States as a day of humiliation and mourning, and I earnestly recommend all the people to assemble on that day in their respective places of Divine worship there to render alike their tribute of sorrowful submission to the will of the Almighty God and of reverence and love for the memory and character of our late Chief Magistrate

In witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed Done at the city of Washington on the 22nd day of September in the year of our Lord 1881, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and sixth

To Secretary of State, Washington

I beg to transmit to you the following resolution passed at the public meeting of the inhabitants of this city to-day. I assure you that I never known deeper feeling shown by all classes in Liverpool than on this occasion The meeting was held in the Town Hall under my presidency as Chief Magistrate, and it was crowded to the utmost capacity by our most distinguished citizens I cannot find words to express my own sympathy, both with the great American Nation and with the deeply afflicted widow and family of the late beloved President. All England is pervaded with these feelings lately expressed sentiments of heartfelt condolence.

Resolved, That the inhabitants of the city of Liverpool, in public meeting assembled, desire to record their horror and indignation of the assassination of Gen Garfield and to express deep sympathy with the American nation in their severe loss and with Mrs Garfield and her family in their bereavement

WM B. FORWOOD

Mayor of Liverpool

To Wm B Forwood, Esq., Mayor of Liverpool

Now among the universal tributes of grief and sympathy have more profoundly touched the full hearts of the late President's sorrowing family and of American people than your message on behalf of the citizens of Liverpool, who share with us the still flow of to day, as they have anxiously shared the weary suspense of the dark days path and feeble struggle again t death

JAMES G BLAINE,

A MERITED COMPLIMENT In his lengthy chapter on the military record of Penobscot County, prepared for the forthcoming history, Capt Lord pays the following merited compliment out to our veteran able fellow townsman General John L Hodsdon Mr Lord is writing of the record of Penobscot in the civil war and says "Happily the materials for this have been provided with extraordinary fullness of detail, and no doubt with practicable accuracy in the voluminous reports issued annually for some years by Gen. John L Hodsdon, now of Bangor, who was Adjutant General of the State during the entire war period and who served with great efficiency and the most conscientious fidelity He and his attaches of his office builded better than they knew' in the carefully labored preparation of these reports We have found nothing else so valuable for the preparation of local military history, in the Adjutant General's Reports of a number of the loyal States Whatever of interest or permanent value occurs in the remainder of this chapter, is due solely to Gen Hodsdon's Reports It must be pleasant for a faithful veteran in the public service to have his memory thus embalmed for posterity.
